MASTER FRIENDLY.

HAT a fine gentleman Master Friendly is grown! 'Twas what indeed I always expected, he was so fond of his book, so dutiful to his papa and mamma, so loving to his brothers and sisters, so kind to his play-mates, and indeed so obliging to every body, that I always thoughthe would be a great man.

And then he learned so fast; dear me, it did my heart good to hear him talk and read! Why he got all the little books by rote that are sold at No. 4, Aldermary Church - Yard, Bow - Lane, when he was but a very little boy, and made this copy of verses, for which his mamina mamma gave him this pretty dog you fee him playing with.

WHEN the fun doth arise you must get up each day,

And fall on your knees, and to God humblypray:

And brush you apparel, and comb out your bair;

Then wish a good morning to all in your view,

And bow to your parents and bid them adieu;

Salute ev'ry person as to school you do go:

When at school to your Master due reverence show.

And if you can't read, proy endeavour to fpell;

For by frequently spelling you learn to read well.

Master Billy Friendly.

Shun all idle boys, and the wicked and rude;

And pray, only play with those & ys who are good.

To church you must every Sunday repair,

And behave yourself decently while you are there.

At the close of the day, ere you go to your rest,

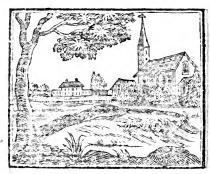

Kneel again to your parents, and be again bleft;

And to the Almighty again humbly pray,
That he may preserve you by night as by day.

Then he never missed church. Ah, he was a charming boy! Why, I have heard him say his catechism of a Sunday better than all the rest of the children.— This is a view of the church.

And then of other days there was no occasion to bid him go to school. No, no! As soon as he had said his prayers, asked a blessing of his papa and mamma, washed himself, and eat his breakfast, he threw his satched over his back; and away away he was gone in an instant. At which his papa was so pleased, that he gave him this little horse.

And at school, he to be sure was the sirst boy to say his lesson; and was so obliging to his master, and kind to his chool-fellows, that they all admired him. And then as night he never sailed to ask a blessing of his papa and mamma, and to say his prayers before he went to bed. Dear me, he was a delightful child! Well, God bless him; and God Almighty will bless him and every one who is good. Why, you see he is a parliament-man already, and rides in a fine chariot, and yet he is not proud and puffed up, and above speaking to a poor body; but is as charitable, and humble, and good-natured as ever, and yet he knows how to behave and to speak to any body; and can talk to a Judge, aye, and the King too, for ought I know. Well, I faw him carried in the chair when he was chosen parliament man. And he looked -he looked -I don't know what he looked like, but every body was in love with him? I don't mean because he was handsome, out because he was so good-natured, so virtuous, and fo charitable. Why, he gives money, and victuals, and drink to ill poor people in distress, and will go io see even the meanest person in the world if fick. I remember he gave a great deal of money to the unhappy people who suffered by that bad fire in Cornbill; and put on his old coat, and went himself even among the slames to affest those who were like to suffer. Poosoul, how he would have rejoiced could he but have faved poor little Betfey and Polly Eldridge, who, pretty creatures were both burnt with their papa and mamma, in the same house. Ah me! was ever any thing fo terrible? it makes me fined tears whenever I think on it. To hear the dear babes cry to their papa and mamma to fave them, while they, poor fouls, were unable to fave themselves; and then to see them all fink down into the flames together, is too shocking to be mentioned. Poor Betfey and Polly! See what pretty children they were. They were both at play

But don't let us talk any more about the dear creatures; for it makes my heart bleed. I hope though you will remember this fad flory, and always take care of your fire and candle; and that your nurse will take care too, lest the same thing should happen to you; for 'tis a terrible.

Master BILLY FRIENDLY. 17 terrible thing, my dear, to be burnt to death. Mr. Friendly, for all he is so great a man, and worth so much money, never goes to-bed himself till every fire and candle is out in the house. But where will you find a man so wise as Mr. Friendly?

Master Friendly, his son, they say exactly copies his papa; for which reason I would have you always keep him, and such as he is, company. See how pretty he sits with his friends. And pray let his papa be your example; for I have heard my grandfather (who was a very wife man) fay, that example was more useful than precept; and I remember our parson, who is a very learned man, and a good man too, told us last Sunday that evil communication would corrupt good manners: and Solemon, they say,

Master Billy Friendly. 19 always thought so himself, who you know was the wifest man in the world.

Good company will mend the mind,
Make it to virtue more inclin'd,

And suture happiness secure:

And vicious principles impart:
Whence all we can expect to gain,
Is poyerty, disease, and pain.

Mifs POLLY FRIENDLY.

Y OU have read the history of Master Friendly; and this is the history of Miss Polly his fister. This is her picture.

She, you must know, was altogether as good as her brother; for indeed she imitated him in every thing. She was dutiful to her papa and mamma, loving to her brothers and sisters, kind to her play-mates, and very complaisant and obliging to every body. Then she never missed saying her prayers morning and evening, as some naughty girls do.

No, no! she always remembered her Creator in the days of her youth; and asked a blessing of her papa and mamma every morning and night. She shewed a surprising and uncommon capacity for learning; her memory was of great ser-

The History of

vice to forward her in every thing she was taught; she could read by the time she was five years old, in any book that was put into her hands with great propriety and accuracy, always taking care to mind her stops, and not read too loud, or with a tone; she could likewise read

French extremely well, and worked with

with as great perfection as any little Miss of her age; but above all, her duty to God and her parents was exemplary, she behaving with becoming respect and good manners to her fuperiors and equals, and to those beneath her with great good-nature; she was from a child charitable to the poor, and used often to point out poor distressed objects to her papa and mamma. Or if she faw any little girl when she was walking out, who appeared in diffress, she would give her fome money. Then she was fo fond of going to church and to school; so ready and willing to do as she was bid, and so deedy at her work, that I think she was the best little girl I ever knew; and every body loved her: A lady who kept a fine chariot and nice pair of horses, would frequently ask Mr. and Mrs. Friendly to let Miss take an airing with with her in the holiday time; only see how pretty she rides by the side of this good-natured gen lewoman; and so hall all little misses who behave like ter. Then she never told a lie in her life. No, no! she knew that was a naughty au-pas trick. Why I remember once the by accident, poor girl, broke a whole fet of the finest china I ever saw; and for fear her mamma should be angry, truly she took them under her apron, and hid the pieces in the coal-hole. All the fervants were called to account for it, and all affirmed they were innocent; to the fault laid upon No-body; for theme an old imaginary fellow of that name n every family, who generally does a reat deal of mischies. However, to make short of my story, the broken ieces were found two days afterards in the coal-hole in the kitchen; and that being the province of Dolly he cook maid, she, poor girl, was again axed with the crime, and threatened to se turned away; when in comes pretty Miss Polly, with tears in her eyes, and falling on her knees to her mamma, negged she would not be angry with Dolly the cook, or any body elfe; for t was she that broke the china, and hid t there, to avoid her displeasure. Her mamma was fo pleased with her open and generous confession, that she took her up in her arms, and kissed her a thousand times. "Now, my dear, says she, I love you better than ever I did, because you would not tell me a lie, nor suffer your own saults to be laid upon another; and as a reward for your honesty effy a dlove of fruth, here, d'ye fee & will give you this fine pretty Robin, nd this Watch.

Little Pelly took the watch indeed, and thanked her mamma, with a curefy down to the ground, but would not vear it: "For," fays she, "as none of he other children at school havewatches, namma, they may think I am proud; and you know, mamma, you always old me it was a very naughty thing to se proud."

Miss Polly had been for some time earning to dance, and to play on the earpsichord, both which she did with great skill; in short she undertook nothing but what she accomplished with ease; this was a great satisfaction to her papa and mamma, who could not forbear sometimes breaking out in her praise; and indeed no one could blame them as they had good reason; but there are some parents so partial to their children children, they will praise even their faults, or at least will be blind to them, and call them little follies of youth.

As the grew up, the made it her bufiness to visit the poor, and to make every body happy in the neighbourhood; by which means the obtained fuch a good character, and was so esteemed, that a great many gentlemen made their adcresses to her, though her fortune was but fmall; and among the rest of her admirers came Mr. Alderman Forefight, who was always of opinion, that virtue and industry were the best portion with a wife. He therefore married Miss

Polly, who made him a dutiful, obedient, and loving wife; and he in return proved to her a kind, indulgent, and affectionate husband. Soon after the wedding Mr. Alderman was chosen Lord-Mayor; and now she is the great Lady-Mayores, and rides in the grand oilt

Curious and Instructive Tale

THREE LITTLE FISHES.

NCE upon a time, when fifthes, birds, and beafts could speak, and when fairies had the power of doing what they pleased, it happened that a fairy sat down by the side of a fountain, where three little filver trouts were playing about the fiream.—She took great delight in thefe little trouts, and came every day to look at them; till at last two of them grew uneasy at their fituation, and when the fairy came again they desired that she would grant one wish to each of them.

THREE LITTLE FISHES. 39

Now this was a very naughty thing in the two little fishes, and you will see that they were rightly served for not being contented with their situation.

the Fairy, if I can be of any benefit to you, you may depend upon it I will." So the eldest of these sished that he might have wings like the Birds, that he might fly all over the world. Immediately the fairy touched him with her wand, and the wings grew out from his shoulders, and he rose up out of the water, mounting into the air, above the very clouds.

He now resolved to travel, and to wisit all the parts of the earth; he flew overrivers, woods, meadows, and mountains.

tairs, till growing quite weary, he thought it best to come down, and take some refreshment. But the little fool forgot that he was in a strange country, and many a mile from the fweet fountain where he was born and fed. So when he came down, he happened to alight among dry fands and rocks where there was not a bit to eat, nor a drop of water to drink; and there he lay tired and unable to get up, fluttering and gasping, and beating himself against the stones, till at last he died in great misery.

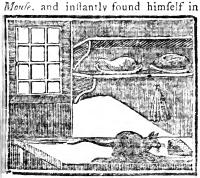

Now the fecond of these two little fishes that was every bit as proud as his brother, desired that the fairy would change him into a Mouse: "Then fays

THREE LITTLE FISHES. 41 he (I shall no longer be confined in a small narrow brook, but shall range about from place to place, just as I please: I shall feast upon the nicest things, and quench my thirst wherever

I like.

Well-foit was; with a touch of the Fairy's wand, he directly became a a pantry filled with dainties. But foon he heard a buille at the door, and the cat was let in upon him, and forgetting every pleasure that he had before wished for, he wanted nothing now but to save his life. He ran about every where, and the cat pursued him wherefoever he went, till after a chace of some time, he was at length taken, killed, and eat.

The Fairy then asked the youngest trout, whether he would wish for any thing; but the good sish replied, "You know I am but a poor and silly sish, and I don't know what is good or bad for me; but if I must wish for something, it is that you would do with me what what you think best; for I would like to live or die, just as you would have me." Now, as soon as the little trout had faid this, the Fairy took a great liking to him, and filled his heart with content and joy, so that this little trout flept always in peace, and awoke in gladness. Whenever he was hungry, the brook supplied him with food; and he fwam with great delight about the brook, and whatever happened, he was always pleafed and thankful, and was the happiest of all the little fishes that ever fwam in the water.

APPLICATION.

This story of the fishes is a true picture of life, and if people were to be indulged 44 The TALE of the &c.

indulged in all their defires, they would bring nothing but diffress, and ruin on themselves. Children should learn betimes to fear God, and to serve him rightly, and he will give them all that is proper for them, as he best knows what is for their good. If the two eldest sishes had been humble and content, they might have lived as happy as the youngest did, but by their own folly they were the means
